HH Architecture Interior Designer Achieves NCIDQ Certification

November 16, 2015

RALEIGH, N.C. – HH Architecture is pleased to announce that Caroline Davenport, NCIDQ, IIDA, LEED AP ID+C, has earned her National Council for Interior Design Qualification (NCIDQ) certificate. This certification for professional interior designers demonstrates her proficiency and experience in designing solutions that are functional, aesthetically appealing, and protects the life, safety, and welfare of the community.

Ms. Davenport joined HH Architecture in 2013 and she brings significant experience in space planning, furniture and finish selection as well as lighting and interior design. She is focused on sustainable design and creating spaces that are inviting, functional, and energy efficient. She is currently working on the Wayne County Regional Agriculture and Convention Center, the USDA Forest Service RTP Concept Building, the ECU Jones Galley Renovation and the San-Lee Nature Center.

“We are proud of Caroline for her commitment and dedication to her craft. Earning her NCIDQ certification is a challenging process that she has taken very seriously,” said Kristen Hess, principal of HH Architecture. “Caroline is a great resource for our team and our clients and this certification is a demonstration of her passion for her work.”

Ms. Davenport is a past Co-City Center Director of the Triangle International Interior Design Association (IIDA) and currently serves on the Triangle IIDA Steering Committee. She holds a Master of Fine Arts degree in Interior Environments from Virginia Commonwealth University.
